

Steven Van Uytsel is Associate Professor in the Faculty of Law at Kyushu University (Japan). He received his legal education at the University of Antwerp. During his studies at the University of Antwerp, he spent half a year at Uppsala University in the framework of the European ERASMUS Exchange program. He then went on to complete his LL.M. & LL.D. at Kyushu University and his Master of Arts (Japanese Studies) at the Mercator Hogeschool. Steven specializes in competition law, with a particular interest in enforcement issues and the position of competition law in countries in transition. Steven has been invited to present and lecture on these topics at enforcement institutions and leading law schools in Belgium, China, Germany, Japan, Thailand and Vietnam. His most recent scholarship on private enforcement is in a co-edited volume at Cambridge University Press, titled Collective Actions: Enhancing Access to Justice and Reconciling Multilayer Interests? Steven's latest contribution to competition and countries in transition is titled China's Antimonopoly Law and Recurrence to Standards. In the past, Steven has been awarded prestigious scholarships, including the Erasmus Scholarship and the Japanese Ministry of Education, Culture, Sports, Science, and Technology (Monbukagakusho) Scholarship. Currently, Steven is the recipient of a Grant in Aid for Young Scholars from the Japanese Society for the Promotion of Science for his research project on "Public Enforcement Institutions and Private Actors – Towards a More Effective Cooperation". In 2012, he has also been granted the title of Senior Research Fellow by the EU Institute Japan – Kyushu for engaging in research on EU Law.
